The Springboks face the All Blacks on Saturday in another brutal back-to-back fixture, with the visit to New Zealand next week a chance to make a statement of intent ahead of next year's World Cup. The last time they met in New Zealand was in the 2009 World Cup, where the Boks cruised to an 8-7 victory to secure a top spot for the Super Rugby final. There were plenty of similarities in the game with the Boks coming from a try-scoring deficit to beat the All Blacks 21-13, but there were also differences, the best being injury to captain Jean de Villiers, who is set to be out for a week and is doubtful for Saturday's clash. In the end, it was a case of one team's big-game experience being the difference in the end, after the hosts started brightly. Up until the second half, the contest was a closely-fought battle, but as the scoreline suggests, the Boks dominated the second stanza. The visitors controlled most of the early exchanges, with tighthead prop Dean Greyling pulling off a great lineout steal to set up JP Pietersen, who offloaded the ball to Pieter-Steph du Toit for a well-worked try. After a sustained period of All Blacks pressure, the Boks rallied well and, with the All Blacks penalised at the scrum, Francois Steyn broke through for a well-worked try. It took the Boks just six minutes to break away from the All Blacks, and with JP Pietersen back to his usual No 12, he smashed through the middle of the All Blacks to set up Curwin Bosch. Bosch then crossed for another well-worked try, and the Boks led 13-0, with the All Blacks trailing at the break. The Boks started the second
